You will remember that I arrived in Florida the latter part of November, having lingered in Baltimore just long enough to feel the disagreeable effect of the first keen cold, and in my walks along its frosty pavements, to be disagreeably impressed with the muffled up pedestrians hurrying along with their blue, impassive faces. But November in Florida has quite a different air, and I find that these same blue-nosed, reserved Baltimorians, when transplanted to this genial atmosphere, blossom out into the most perfect specimens of the smiling, indolent, happy lounger, who looks pleasantly into the faces he meets, and gets up a friendly chat in defiance of the rules of etiquette at home.

THE ALLIGATOR CRUSADIL.

It is, and always has been, a delight to me to look back to my first day in Florida; to recall the lazy comfort I took in the warm sunshine, and the soft atmosphere with just a whisper of a breeze in it; to feel almost a child again as I plunged my feet deep into the warm, white sand, and sauntered slowly along the streets of Jacksonville, finding everything of interest, because everything was new and strange.

When I stopped under an orange tree to admire its glossy, green foliage and tempting truit, or under a majestic live oak to catch at the long, graceful hanging moss, I was not afraid of being smiled at as a specimen of verdancy, for here we have a country of the most delightful unrestraint. The winter season is a grand holiday, and all unnecessary forms and conventionalities are done away with. You will, by that, understand that I did not hesitate to form one of a crowd that is always congregated before a "Florida Curiosity Shop," to take my turn at poking up the half-torpid little alligators in their water trunks, and to shy away with an instinct of fear and repulsion, at the huge "ten-footer" tied to a tree. By way of parenthasis, I will remark that the alligator, or "gaiter," as it is commonly called, is the pride of the native Floridian, and he presses it on the "Yankee's" notice in all styles, stuffed, varnished, wet, dry, dead and alive, and | ent time. The whole town turns out in all stages between. HOTELS. The first thing to claim the attention of visitors is, of course, the hotels and boarding houses, and the number of them very nearly corresponds to the number of houses. I cannot speak so well of the accommodations they offer. The accusation of exorbitant charges is, I think, unfair, when the shortness of the busy ductiveness of the soil. The large hotels, in both Jacksonville and Palatka, command four dollars per day. The rooms and parlors are elegantly furnished, the servants remarkably well trained, and the table everything that the most fastidious epicare could desire; while the proprietors are unceasing in their efforts to furnish amusement to their guests.

The boarding houses are superior to my I have known in the North, East or West, and myriads of invalids and pleasure-seekers in moderate circumstances find comfort and kind attention within their walls for the consideration of two dollars per day. Still cheaper board can be obtained in private families, though I believe the price never goes below ten dollars per week. The number of visitors to Florida this winter is said to be far below the average; but the inhabitants account for it by the hard times; the fatigue of the people over the Centennial, and their consequent dislike for another trip so soon; and, lastly, the prevailing, but erroneous opinion at the North that political troubles were imminent in Florida. The spirit of the Southern people is crushed to such an extent by the miserably hard times they have had since the war, that they will keep peace at almost any sacrifice. It would be a heart of stone that could come into these poor Southern homes, stripped of almost everything but the bare walls, and see the struggle it has been for the inmates to get a mere livelihood and not feel the greatest compassion for them. Any bitterness of feeling they may have entertained towards people from the North has entirely disappeared, and settlers as well as visitors are welcomed with sincere cordiality. POLITICAL.

Being a woman, and therefore imperfectly versed in political matters, I touch on them deprecatingly and apologetically. But I notice that not only among the native born Southerners, but among the settlers from the North, there is a quiet. but deep and earnest desire for the Democracy to come power. It may be an item of interest to you that I have not to my knowledge, met a Republican. since I came into the state. I think that about the only representatives of the party are those holding government offices. Republicans coming into the state to settle, and thus identify themselves with the interests of the state, work around to the Democratic side in a short time. In writing et a country, the subject of agraculture, of course, claims a pro recover from the indiguant surprise with nence. But my remarks on this subject, which they discover the first flaw in their | which cannot be favorable, must be taken to apply only to Eastern Florida, good and bad philosophically, enjoying and more particularly to the country along the banks of the St. John's river. If the prosperity of a country depended on the fertility of its soil, methinks the beautiful waters of the St. John's would ripple through a quiet uninhabited country from its scource to the ses. Florida owes its prosperity to its delightful, life-giving climate. The inhabitants, instead of being tillers of the soil, are keepers of boarding houses. SWEET POTATOES OVERDONE.

> A man, meeting a fellow-townsman on the street, will ask not how "the crops" are, but how many consumptive Yankees came in on the boat last night?" A native being asked "what do you live on down here?" replied, "on Yankees in the winter, and sweet-taters in the summer." It is needless to add that they much prefer the Yankee. You remember that I used to like sweet-potatoes. When our landlady here passed me the fried sweetpotatoes at the breakfast table I made her happy by telling of my taste for them, and I also partook of sweet-potato cakes with the remark that it was a new and charming dish. At dinner I graciously accepted a large boiled sweet-potato, and and when the dessert came around, debated for some time between the respective merits of a sweetpotato pie and a sweet-potato pudding. I smiled blandly at supper over the sweet-potato hash, but ever since that day I have abstained from the sweet "apple of the earth" in all its enticing shapes It being necessary to eat something, I tried hominy-hominy cakes in the morning, hominy with gravy for dinner, hominy fritters for supper, etc. The most that can be said for it is its cheapness and its "filling up" quality. The greater part of the vegetables in market are shipped here from more productive regions, and at a high price. This endless stretch of sand certainly could not give much delight to a farmer's eye. It is indeed almost unproductive until it is fertilized.

> As I would like to close this letter with a little Florida patriotism, I will choose the theme of the weather. My most glowing eulogies could not exaggerate the delights of this climate at the presover the sidewalks, or out in little boat-
